Sir, those are great initiatives. Operations Research has been of immense use in my day to day work life. I would suggest if we could have Use-Case discussions in the classroom along with the coursework to understand the practical applications of the topics. Secondly, if we could have Behavioural Economics as one of the subjects that would enhance our value proposition to the market.

Happy to see this Change! The scope, structure and value of the proposed course is truly invaluable. Operations Management skills is the need of the hour.
Please include Industrial Study Case Study as a mandatory course. Teaching a subject which deals in role of Information Technology in Operations Management / Supply Management can also be added. Mandatory training or project in R programming / Python Programming / Excel Analytics should be a part of the course. This might add more value. Normally all IIMs train students in these and the students can find more opportunities.

Having my masters in Industrial engineering and Bachelors in Production engineering at BIT, I'm actually impressed to see the proposed changes in the course structure. Proposed course are highly recommended as Industrial Engineering has a very high scope in the present market and in the future, these courses would cover the basic as well as the advanced technologies needed for a Industrial engineer.

Hope that my feedback help.

If IMBA degree is provided with a B.E degree in same time ,then there is no harm in it and it will also increase chances of students in placement as supply chain and operations is a trending field now a days. I think it's a great initiative.

make students get some hands on experience in industry by providing them better internship opportunities from college bcoz it matters a lot and projects should be involved in every semester bcoz these things count finally .

This new course production and industrial with integrated MBA is structured so precisely and as per the employability of the students.
Some of the courses in this program will also be helpful for the students in the field of Research and Development.
